I'm not robot!

A resume headline or a resume title is a catchy brief that tells the interviewer who you are and highlights your value as an individual. Located right at the top of the resume, a resume headline for fresher is the first thing that the employer sees. As such it should be tempting enough to make them want to indulge in your resume further. Since you only get a few seconds' window before the hiring manager moves on to other resumes, your resume headline should stand out and pitch you as the ideal candidate they are looking for. It should talk about your work experience and skills. However, if you are a fresher with little (internship) or no work experience to back you up then you can highlight your personal attributes and let them do the talking. In this article, we'll discuss and look at some resume headline examples and samples for how a resume headline for fresher should look like, depending upon the job profile you are applying for. When you're applying for a job, a cover letter is the best way to attract positive attention to your resume. Serving as a letter of introduction, it can express your interest in a company, demonstrate your qualifications for a general manager position and establish your abilities to communicate effectively. A good cover letter is an effective tool to get your foot in the door for an interview. Although it may be tempting to exercise creativity as you put together your application, resist the urge and opt, instead, for a professional approach. Include your contact information (name, mailing address, phone number and email address) in a block at the top of your document in a header format. A couple of lines below the header, put the date you are writing your letter, aligned on the left side. Address the hiring manager or other appropriate professional by name. Your letter should appear businesslike with a single-spaced body and easy-to-read font. Calibri, Times New Roman and Arial are more traditionally accepted fonts. Add a single-space line between paragraphs, and use three single-space lines between your closing and your name. Your signature will go in that space. Close with "Sincerely" or "Regards." Keep your style and language consistent throughout, with margins of no more than 1.5 inches. If you are sending your letter as a hard copy, be sure to sign it in ink. The first paragraph introduces you and tells the reader why you are writing the letter and sending your resume. Explain that you are interested in an available general manager position. State where you saw the opening listed or how you heard that the company was hiring. Briefly state some basic knowledge you have about the organization and elaborate why you are interested in working for them, especially as a general manager. If you don't know much about the company, do some research before writing the letter. Following the introductory paragraph, write a new paragraph explaining how you meet the job requirements. Highlight your education and experience that qualify you for the job. Briefly share information about any awards or achievements you've earned that relate directly to the general manager position. Provide examples of how you've exhibited leadership or specific instances where you've managed others. Cover all the details you want to include, but remember, you aren't repeating your resume. Avoid listing irrelevant facts that don't support your argument that you are the right person for the job. The purpose of the cover letter is to entice the recipient to read your resume. Limit your letter to one page in length. In a final paragraph, reiterate how your skills, talents and experience align with the company and the traits they are seeking in an applicant. Thank the reader for considering your application and encourage her to contact you, in case she needs more details about your qualifications or wants to schedule an interview. If you feel comfortable with the idea, show initiative by stating that you will contact her within a couple of weeks to check on the status of your application. Demonstrating your comfort and confidence in contacting a potential employer may convince a reader that you have the skills for a management position. Carefully proofread your letter before sending it. A letter full of errors or misspellings will not get you an interview. A resume headline is a summary of all such detailed information that adds value to your prospective job. Every job openings receive several applications, and hence recruiters develop their initial impression through resume headline only. Resume Headline for Fresher The internship experience should occupy the resume headline part if you are a fresher, especially if it matches the job profile you are applying for. Your extraordinary personal strength or achievements, if that is relevant to the job, should take part in the resume headline too. To summarise, keep the headlines short, crisp, and targeted. Writing a complete sentence may snatch the essence of the impression. It is recommended to use words or particular phrases.
